NEW YORK, Aug. 11, 1874. Editor of Opinion :

THREE OBJECTS OF CHARITY, Vanderbilt, Stewart, Astor and my self took a trip the other day, to Garden City on Long Island. Stewart is building the whole thing on his own account, and likewise a railroad to reach it. We naturally fell to talking about this world's goods.

As for Vanderbilt, we suspect from something he said, that the market value of his stock, bonds, real estate and the like trifles, is about $90,000,000 (ninety millions). Stewart passed him over the road both ways, so he didn't have to break into it. Astor has only about four hundred houses; place these side by side two hundred on either hand, and friend Astor could walk through the front yards two miles up, and cross over and walk the same distance in return and not trespass. Stewart said he was sorry he couldn't give a better account of himself, but really he didn't think he was worth much more than $35, 000,000 (thirty-five millions), and 1 noticed a tear dropped into his pocket book which was open in his hand. It may not occur to the ordinary reader why I note that it fell into the pocket book, but by a rapid calculation which I made, I found this taking his own figures as to the value of the man, as a basis. I did not talk much about myself down there, but when we reached the city, I invited them to step up to my boarding-house, and see what a bargain I had got for $7.50 per week, with use of bath room, I saw at once by their general manner that they didn't care to.

THE BANJO IN COURT.

The plaintive banjo is progressand backed by the strong arm of day's record." law, in the unmusical as well. It has made its first speech to the court, been upheld by the judge, and bowed itself out with a twang, winner of the great legal heart.

The facts are these: Mrs A. keeper of a boarding house, wherein the lodgers grievously complain as the congregation of banjos in the saloon next door is numerous and very flighty, confining itself not to the dulcet melodies in which even A-s' establishment; but when the tattoos on table and floor, with loud cries for "lager" reach the already overcharged ear of the before mentioned boarder; then it is that he rises from his sleepless couch, as one man, and gropes his way to the landlady's room, and communicates through the key hole his determinthere provided, unless she swoop down upon that congregation of banjos, and serve its manipulators up hot for breakfast-or words to that effect. The lady appeals to the gentlemanly proprietor, but without success, and then to the court. The aggregate boarder, weak and sleepless, appears with his testimony written in haggard face, and bloodshot eyes-in strong contrast to the full, round visage of the defendant, banjo, who finally gets the case, and goes out of the court with its friends, playing in an absent sort of way, "Wake me dearest with thy lute." The attention of music lovers is called to advertisements in New York papers, under head of "Rooms to Let."

NEWSPAPER SQUABBLING. The Times of this city has been trying to find out all about the Tribune, and hasn't succeeded worth a cent; inasmuch as that the latter turns the cold shoulder to that cotemporary, no matter how tempting the bait for a controversy may be, or how broad its editorial abuse, the Tribune wont even wink at it. Very naturally this makes the Times foam at the mouth, and it goes for the former with back up, and proceeds to turn over all the stones which lay upon the buried and forgotton errors of that paper and the journalists connected with it. But Whitelaw Reid keeps his temper, as he does the Tribune, well in hand, and ignores the mark of eager interrogation on his rival's face; and it must be confessed the picture presented, bears somewhat the likeness care for an exhaustive dissertation on the subject. The only point I desire to make is to note the respect gained to a paper that makes its own business no one's else, desires the same spirit manifested in return, and devotes space to its readers' interest, in place of carrying on a running fire of words with jealous rivals. This may seem pretty close on to an advertisement of the Tribune, but I use the name as it stands prominent-almost alone as an exponent of this improved system of journalism; and its success, now fully re-established since the unfortunate campaign of '72, gives my point all the force I could Snow.

FINISHED AND FOLDED UP .-There, that is finished and folded up, and I am heartily glad," said Bertha, as she took off her little silver thimble and laid on the table a pretty blue muslin dress on which she had been busy for several days. "Is it well done, too ?" asked practical Aunt Mabel "Pretty well done for me, auntie; mother says I improve in dressmaking."

"That is encouraging. Now, Bertha, do you know that something else of yours is also finished and folded up this evening ?"

"What else can it be, Aunt Madrop was really worth about $2100, bel? This is the only piece of work I have had about this week, unless it is that tidy. I do not expect to see the end of that these six weeks."

"Still you have finished and folded up something far more important than your tidy or your dress even. Something that will not be unfolded again for ages perhaps; and yet you will surely see it again with every line and fold. Your day's record is done, and gone from your keeping. This instrument of high strung ing. You may remodel the dress if organization seems destined to take it does not please you, but you can a high position in the musical world, not change one jot or tittle of the

> Aunt Mabel had the fashion of dropping these seed-thoughts, which often grow into strong, vigorous plants in young hearts.

"What has the record been ?" ask ed Bertha, of her own heart, as she thoughtfully laid away the blue muslin. As little by little she tried that they can neither sleep nor rest, to go over the hours, there was much she would gladly have changed if she could.

"I wish I had spoken pleasantly to Ned when he wished me to help the sleeply ear would delight, but him with his flag. It would only grovelling in the lowest depths of have taken me a minute or two and harmony. "Any old knives to he was first sad, and then vexed grind," might be asked once, twice, with my crossness. A sight of a little Bible, whose clasp Ind been closed all day, suggested still more reproachful thoughts.

"No wonder I have such a poor day's record, when I began it in too much haste for prayer or reading a verse even." The day's work did not look so satisfactory from this ation to leave the bed and board standpoint, and she sighed as she felt it was all folded up.
